DEPARTURES. BY TRAVIS & CO.'S HAMILTON LINE:

OVER THE DIVIDE Was yesterday the scene of contention between two teamsters as to the right of way. One couldn't get out and the other wouldn't. After a war of words that became somewhat more earnest than becomes polite society, a recourse was proposed to the arbitrament of arms, when, much to the THANES AND REGARDS are due to our friend Wallace Greenwall, who for many months has been acting in the capacity of Superintendent of the Peavine and Alps. Mr. Greenwall by his uniform courtesy and obliging manners, has made himself many friends in the community, and we hope, that if distance may separate him from his friends in Pioche, that he will always depend, and distiy upon their being leal and true in two vale.

NOTICE.

P J. H. SMITH AUTHORIZES A BROWN In the process of the process o application of lynch law from several keel-boat crews. The full history of this affair has never been fully unfolded and perhaps never will be, but for terrible retribution and complete annihilation outside of any authorized decrees it never had its equal in any administration of lynch-law, the recitals of which cast so many shadows on the annals of the West and South. The Autumn and Winter, immediately preceding the month of April, 1809, had been marked by the numerous and hellish atrocities of the bandits of the Crows' Nest. Several boats and their entire crews had disappeared at that point and no traces could be found of them afterward. The country around, and up and down the river, had been victimized and robbed in almost every conceivable form by villains, whose movements could be satisfactorily traced as tending towards the Crows' Nest. In that month it occurred that seven keelboats were concentrated at the bead of Ninemile Ranch, within work. Nest. In that month it occurred that seven keelboats were concentrated at the head of Nine-mile Reach, within speaking distance of each other, being detained by heavy contrary winds. The crew of these were well informed upon the villanies of those who harbored on the little island a few miles below them. Many of them had friends and old comrades, who were known to have been on the what more earnest than becomes postes society, a recourse was proposed to the stoinishment of arms, when, much to the astonishment of both, a determined looking "old cuss" walked up, whose team was delayed by the dispute, and while the preliminaries of combat were being settled he yanked one team this way and set the other that, in such a manner than othing was left to fight about. This locating was step with the put of the work of the boatmen were wounded and an an of business that same old cuss is a trump.

LOVELY DAYS and pleasant nights are now becoming the rule. The mud is drying up, streets are becoming passable, and now nothing is wanted but increased activity in the mines, and all will be joyful as the jocund morn. We have had stormy, miserable weather so long, that now fine sunny days are blessing us, all the people in town seem desirous of gestering out of doors and enjoying it. Yesteriay the streets were crowded with pedestrians and loungers, while a plentiful admixture of ladies rendered the sidewalks attractive and storekeepers busy. The hadies, of whom be it known, we are the sworn admirer and champion, whenever they go out, they love dearly to do a liftle shopping. It is a very innocent recreation of which we highly approve, especially when we do not pay for it. Then with reckless ardour, we declare their choice unique and their taste perfection.
